Editor's Note

In These Delightful Pleasant Groves was written in 1692 by Henry Purcell (1659-1695), one of the great English composers. He was the organist at Westminster Abbey in London, and upon his death at the age of 36 his body was buried beneath the organ there. Although written in the “Baroque” era, this madrigal has many of the stylistic characteristics of the Renaissance madrigal with its contrasts between dance-like sections and flowing lyrical sections.

This edition is based on the Collection of Henry Purcell Songs printed by William Perfon in 1721. The madrigal was written as “incidental music” for “The Libertine,” a tragic comedy by Thomas Shadwell. The original, of course, is without dynamic markings and articulations that we use today. In addition, the “optional D.S. al fine” was added by this editor.

Throughout this madrigal the text and individual accents should be emphasized, such as:

Cél-e-brate, háp-py, de-líght-ful

Also, when singing the “laugh” sections at measures 26-32, try to accent only the first note of the phrase, then let other voices be heard. Additionally, try to achieve the “due” sounds on “laugh” between the Soprano/Bass and Tenor/Alto in mm. 27-29, and on “revels” between the Alto/Tenor in mm. 37-45 and Soprano/Bass in mm. 38-45. Pay close attention to the dynamics, learn the notes quickly, then enjoy this wonderful madrigal!
