Editor's Note

In These Delightful Pleasant Groves was written in 1692 by Henry Purcell (1659-1695), one of the great English composers. He was the organist at Westminster Abbey in London, and upon his death at the age of 36 his body was buried beneath the organ there. Although written in the "Baroque" era, this madrigal has many of the stylistic characteristics of the Renaissance madrigal with its contrasts between dance-like sections and flowing lyrical sections.

This 3-part treble arrangement has been lowered to F minor from the original G minor. In this way the soprano line, which predominantly has the melody, does not go too high (nothing above a high F) and the alto not too low (nothing below a low A-flat).

Throughout this arrangement (and all madrigals!) the text and individual text accents should be emphasized, such as:

Cél-e-brate, háp-py, de-light-ful

Also, when singing the "laugh" sections at measures 26-32, try to accent only the first note of the phrase, then let other voices be heard. Pay close attention to the dynamics, learn the notes quickly, then enjoy this wonderful madrigal!
