PROGRAM NOTES

This well-known American folk song has been spiced up with ingredients that will make your audiences want to get up and try some “salsa” dancing. Guaguancó is a sub-genre of the Cuban rumba, a highly complex rhythmic music and dance style. It was originally the dance and music of the Orisha religion rituals. It was ported to Cuba by African slaves, and is alive nowadays in the Santería cult. But rather than a mere influence in Cuban music and dance, guaguancó is regarded as one of its pillars and is probably the closest living derivative of the African soul that is expressed today in jazz, blues, rumba, and mambo.

NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

The introduction statement is to be played in a chorale style. Ensure that the harmonic structure in measure 3 is balanced and sonorous. In measure 6, the guaguancó rhythm style is introduced in the rhythm section. Note that the quarter note pickup before measure 6 should be played in the new tempo; $\text{♩} = 104$. For the rhythm section, work independently with each player to ensure that all parts are being played correctly and at ease before attempting to put it all together. Note that the clave pattern is (3-2) and it is an integral part of the rhythm section. Measure 14 introduces the saxes and trumpets, respectively, producing a quasi “train-like” sound to set up the melody. At measure 22, the melody, which is introduced in unison, by the 1st tenor sax, trumpet, and trombone has been tweaked a bit rhythmically to accommodate the guaguancó style. At measure 38, the soli instruments break into harmony until measure 53. Measure 58 introduces the saxophones playing the melody with a rhythmic pattern of quarter, eighth rest, eighth note, which is a common jazz comping rhythm derived from the tune the “Charleston.” At measure 74, the melody appears in the trumpet section along with a countermelody played by the trombones setting the stage for the “Dinah Won’t You Blow?” section. At measure 90, for added harmonic color, the basic chords are altered by the use of the sharp-9 chord. Direct the students to listen carefully to their intonation when playing the sharp-9 chord because there is a half-step dissonance in the chord that gives it a colorful harmonic edge.

The solo section at measure 106 may be repeated four times (or more) to accommodate the written solos provided for 1st alto, 1st tenor, 1st trumpet, and 1st trombone and optional violin. Suggested solos have been written out to facilitate the young players beginning to improvise. Backgrounds may be played each time or on cue as desired. Measure 124 brings back the “Dinah Won’t You Blow” statement which is repeated several times while building intensity to the end.

Have fun and blow your horn!
