Jambalaya Rag

No trip to Louisiana would be complete without feasting on Jambalaya, the most celebrated food on Louisiana menus. This traditional and scrumptious dish is created by cooking rice with any combination of meat, poultry, seafood or game, along with peppers and other Creole seasonings. The word "jambalaya" comes from the French word for ham, "jambon," which was a prime ingredient when Jambalayas were first made in the 1700s. Gonzales, Louisiana, is called the "Jambalaya capital of the world" and hosts a Jambalaya Festival each spring.

French Quarter Blues

A visit to the French Quarter of New Orleans is a visit to the oldest part of the city that was ruled by the French for many years. The French Quarter boasts charming architecture, unique cultures, and most of all, the style of music known as the Blues. Blues music, an African-American creation, speaks to people of all ethnic backgrounds and is a famous ingredient of the French Quarter culture.

Mardi Gras Magic

Mardi Gras in New Orleans is often called the "greatest free show on Earth." As Carnival Season approaches, the residents decorate the city with streamers and flags in the traditional Mardi Gras colors of green, gold and purple. A sense of magic descends upon the city as the celebration begins with lavish balls and masked spectacles. There are numerous spectacular and unique parades that feature a reigning King or Queen, colorful floats, elaborate costumes, marching bands and dancing in the streets. Although New Orleans holds the most famous Mardi Gras celebration, many other Louisiana cities host their own events as well, including Lafayette, which has one of the largest.
