JEFF DARROHN

Jeff Darrohn

Jeff Darrohn is a composer, arranger, and saxophonist residing in London, England. Originally from Philadelphia, he earned a BM from the University of the Arts. He was director of bands at public and private schools in the Philadelphia area for 17 years before moving to England. Jeff currently leads, performs and records with his six saxophone and rhythm section group, Saxon, in London. He arranges and performs with a variety of US and UK schools and professional bands.

NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

Gospel Blues is a straight-ahead medium tempo swing chart written in a 12-bar blues form.

Stylistically, the chart is based upon two jazz influences. The first one is from late '50s and early '60s small jazz groups that were so popular with jazz artists such as Horace Silver, Cannonball Adderley and Sonny Rollins. The other influences presented in the piece are the jazz sounds of New Orleans. Much of jazz is based upon blues, gospel and spirituals. I think the chart is especially rich with spiritual flavored harmonies.

The piece begins right on the melody without an introduction, so make certain the band is focused. The opening melodic statement is played by the tenor sax, trombone, trumpet and an optional baritone sax.

The second theme at measure 26 recalls the New Orleans sound with a brief quote from "When the Saints Go Marching In" with a call-and-response between the brass and saxophone sections. Solos at measure 38 are written out for alto sax and trumpet. I suggest experimenting with improvisation from the soloists after they have studied and learned the written solos.

This chart is great for teaching basic swing style and the blues. Students should carefully observe the articulations, especially the staccato (short but not clipped) and tenuto marks. The marcato, or rooftop accent (▲), is detached—think "daht."

I hope you and your students enjoy your musical journey!
