The writer of this song, Sheb Wooley, was a very funny man. A real-life cowboy and rodeo rider, he became a country and western musician and actor in the late 1940s. He made many movies and appeared on the variety show "Hee-Haw" as the character "Ben Colder" (who liked to say he got a job in Alaska and had never "been colder"). He wrote this novelty song in the late 1950s, and it became his biggest hit.

Kenny Ascher and Paul Williams received an Oscar nomination for this song, which originally appeared in "The Muppet Movie" in 1979. Jim Henson, the voice of Kermit the Frog, sang the song with a wistfulness that turned it into an unlikely hit on the radio. It may be the only time a frog made it to the Billboard charts!

When the Disney film The Little Mermaid was released in 1989, it was an immediate hit. The story, loosely based on a Hans Christian Andersen fairy tale, recounts the adventures of Ariel, a mermaid who wishes to be human. This song won an Academy Award, a Golden Globe Award, and a Grammy. The film was later turned into a Broadway musical with additional songs by composer Alan Menken.
