Oil on canvas, 73.5 x 102.5 cm.
Current location: Gemäldegalerie, Dresden

About the artist: Caspar David Friedrich was a German painter in the 19th century Romantic era, especially known for his landscapes. He was born in northern Germany and studied in Copenhagen before settling in Dresden in 1798, where he won a prize at the 1805 Weimar competition. He married in 1818 and fathered three children. His paintings were popular for a while, then sadly they fell from favor as Romanticism became less popular. By 1838, he was basically living in poverty, depending on the charity of his friends until his death in 1840. But his works were celebrated again in the early 1900s when his paintings and sculptures were exhibited in Berlin. Today he is appreciated as a painter of international importance during the German Romantic movement.
