NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

This great song by composers Sammy Cahn and Jule Styne has long been a favorite of mine, and it makes a nice vehicle to feature your drummer. This chart is written in a Count Basie/Neal Hefti style. Google those guys if you don't know who they are! Go ahead, I'll wait.

OK, now you probably know that the Count Basie band played music like this with great togetherness and swing, and never too loudly—at least not yet. Note that the phrases at the top are divided in somewhat unexpected ways, so pay attention. The drummer should play tastefully and connect the phrases in a musical manner as this is not about showing big time drum chops. If your second alto does not play the flute, have him or her tacet the flute part. But the flute is a key part of the ensemble sound, so maybe you can bring someone in from the concert band or orchestra to play it. Just a suggestion!

This chart stays pretty soft all the way to measure 53, where it starts to build toward the key change at measure 57, where now you can play loud. There's a short improvised solo at 61 for one of your soloists, but I recommend having the player take a close look at those changes (not simple blues changes) so they can get through them effectively. These chords require a good knowledge of harmony and it's pretty easy to tell when somebody is faking it!

After the solo, there's a counterpoint section matching tenors and trombone against trumpets and altos. The band should listen closely to balance the two lines evenly, and make sure they are playing together rhythmically as well.

The shout chorus at measure 89 is where the band can really cut loose and the trumpets can shine, especially with the lip trill at 94. Do you know how to do a lip trill? Don't ask me, I'm a sax and piano player, so I don't know, but your private teacher can certainly tell you. You do have a private teacher, right? If not, GET ONE! Because measure 94 is going to sound awesome if all four trumpets can do that lip trill! After the shout, quickly settle down and re-establish the soft texture like at the beginning. I hope you have fun with this chart, and that you have happy holidays, even if you are reading this in July.
