NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

Little is written about the historical significance of “Povo.” But the word itself, translated from the Portuguese language, means “people.”

“Povo” was the first track on Freddie Hubbard’s 1972 release entitled Sky Dive. This album featured an amazing array of jazz superstars including Hubert Laws (flute), George Benson (guitar) and Keith Jarrett (piano) to name a few, I highly recommend this outstanding recording.

In this arrangement, after a brief intro based off the first few measures of the original Hubbard version, the bass (electric if possible) enters with a classic funk rock groove and is later joined by the rest of the rhythm section.

The melodic quarter note triplet should be played by trumpet 2 with an even and smooth approach with a little flair—or sass. The trombones echo the trumpet line, but the ‘bones should play in unison as written with less “sass.” The ensemble voicing at 58-59 has some nice voicing in the 4ths, direct your players to dig in and make sure all the voices are heard and balanced.

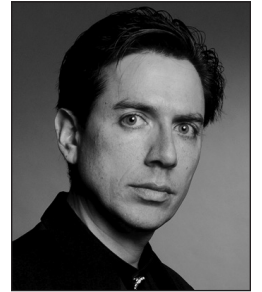

This arrangement features a trumpet solo on a somewhat modified minor blues solo form. After the trumpet solo, there is a build into a send-off for tenor. Make sure the backgrounds stay dynamically under the soloists. The solos are written out as an option but I encourage improvisation. The solo sections can be expanded for other soloists if desired.

Regarding articulation, the staccatos are of course short, but not too short or clipped. The marcato or rooftop accents are detached—think “daht.”

For the rhythm section, the piano and bass parts are hopefully well-notated. The drum part is typical as a drumset guide with indicated hits and ensemble cues as needed. The guitar part consists of slashes for comping. Keep in mind this is not a swing chart where the guitar players would simply comp quarter notes, but a more active approach with a funky, more contemporary feel. In general, mirror the piano part with either sustained chords or a more rhythmical comp. Therefore, make sure the guitar players is near the piano to listen and get ideas from the piano part.

Enjoy!
