About the Authors

Danielle Bayert

Ms. Danielle Bayert is an elementary general music teacher in Lakewood, Colorado. Danielle holds an Associate's degree in Woodwind Performance (saxophone), a Bachelor's degree in Music Education, and a Master's degree in Music Education (with an emphasis in ethnomusicology) from the University of Colorado Boulder in the year 2019.

During Danielle's years of teaching, she has developed a passion for curriculum development, child development, and the cultural significance of music education. Ms. Bayert's classroom is a very active place, filled with manipulatives, centers, and age-appropriate learning. She believes that all children can learn through play and that a high-quality arts education is a right for all people.

Jon Stone

Jon Stone is a private music instructor specializing in ukulele, guitar, and bass. He currently teaches online and in his studio in Littleton, Colorado. In his formative years, Jon studied privately with jazz guitarist Jeff Sherman of Bellarmine College. He later attended the University of Denver Lamont School of Music where he studied with many of the city's finest musicians. Mr. Stone honed his skills in numerous bands playing a variety of styles, and has composed and recorded several albums.

Jon's teaching philosophy is simple: learning songs that the student is interested in gives them a solid foundation of rewarding and fun experiences that can be used as a framework for the harder aspects of music education—namely scales, theory, and sight-reading. Without musical context those concepts can be esoteric and intimidating, but with the proper setup they can be intuitive and easier to grasp.
