NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

This arrangement of “One Mint Julep” was recorded on Two Seconds to Midnight, the debut recording of the Alan Baylock Jazz Orchestra (Sea Breeze Records, SB-2127). It was inspired by jazz pianist Kenny Werner’s version for jazz vocalist Rosanna Vitro.

For the melody to have the proper effect, make sure the staccatos are consistently short and crisp. The scoops at measures 55 and 119 in the tenor sax and trombones 1 and 2 should be fairly long and dramatic, and, as much as possible, the players should arrive at the written note at the same time. This sounds obvious, but sometimes it can be more challenging than it seems. The overall effect should be stylized. Whenever the rooftop (▲) accents occur, always direct the band to play these detached but not staccato—sort of fat like the syllable “daht.”

The baritone sax and bass trombone line in measure 16 (and elsewhere) should be strong. The horns all have the sixteenth-dotted eighth figure in measure 52; this should be snapped—almost like a grace note. Dynamics are critical; for example, measure 55 is p, which occurs after a crescendo—always contrast! Don’t rush the sixteenth line for saxes and trumpets in measure 61.

For the solo sections, I suggest building gradually rather than jumping in with a flurry of notes, although the alto player can hit it hard on the solo break at measure 73. The drum solo in measure 148 should not be very long. The purpose of this drum solo is to set up the last note; it would be anticlimactic if the drummer were to play longer than five or six seconds.

Thanks for your interest in this chart, and I hope you have fun with it. I think the players and the audience will really enjoy it.
