Musical sentences

phrasing, legato and the use of dynamics

A phrase is like a musical sentence. Imagine a singer taking a breath before each new phrase. Phrases (or slurs) should be played legato. Often phrases are shaped by a crescendo and then a decrescendo.

The Baroque period

(about 1600–1750)

Look up the highlighted words to see what they mean.

Baroque music was composed in major and minor keys rather than modes. The bass line was provided by the basso continuo, played by harpsichord or organ and bass instruments like the cello, double bass or bassoon. The keyboard part also played chords using a figured bass – numbers below the bass notes indicating the chords to play. Music was often contrapuntal – the fugue was an important contrapuntal form. The Baroque period saw the rise of the solo concerto and concerto grosso. Other important forms were dance suites, oratorios, cantatas and operas. Music was often decorated with a lot of ornaments – trills, turns and mordents.

Composers: J. S. Bach, George Frederick Handel, Domenico Scarlatti (all born in 1685), Henry Purcell, Georg Philipp Telemann, Antonio Vivaldi, François Couperin, Johann Pachelbel

Instruments: harpsichord, organ (keyboard), violin, viola, cello (strings), flute, oboe, bassoon (woodwind), trumpet, trombone, cornet (brass), timpani (percussion)

Part playing

and chord voicing

On the piano we can play different parts at the same time: we call this 'part playing'. In music, it's important to understand whether all the parts should be played with the same dynamics, or if some are more important and so need to be louder. When playing chords, try to make sure all the notes sound at the same time.
