About the Music

... The sea was the place of men.
 You could spy our great ships running
 White-clouded, tier on tier,
 You could hear their tramping thunder
 As they leaned-to racing near;
 And it was 'Heigh-ho and ho, my lad.'
 When we were outward bound,
 And we sang full many a chanty
 As we walked the capstan round.
 Aye, we sang full many a chanty
 As we drove through wind and wet,
 To the music of five oceans
 That rings in memory yet.

—Harry Kemp

Of Men and the Sea evokes the heroic spirit of the early seafarers, those brave sailors who traversed the high seas during the peak of the clipper ship era. These amazing men endured backbreaking labor, cramped living conditions, the ever-present threat of dangerous weather, and the intense isolation of being at sea for weeks on end, out of sight of land and loved ones.

The opening and closing sections dictate great energy, and should have a rollicking, jaunty spirit. In measures 3–4, work to achieve an equal balance between flutes 1 and 2, and between clarinets 2 and 3. At measure 5, horn should slightly predominate over alto saxophone. At measure 15, the trumpet and oboe line is secondary to the horn and alto saxophone line. A change of dynamic level and a smoother style is introduced at measure 25; avoid slowing down. The marimba ostinato should be audible throughout this section.

Snare drum should be present yet remain in the background at measures 43 and 107. At measure 59, work for a smooth, flowing, and unhurried style. Tempo moves slightly faster at measures 67 and 71 before the ritardando at measure 75. During measure 76, players will achieve a well-supported crescendo by stagger breathing to avoid any obvious pauses for breath. The ensuing passage at measure 77 should be full and sustained. At the a tempo, work to emphasize the forte-piano–crescendo effect—a sharp accent, immediate drop of dynamic level, and smooth crescendo, all with a careful control of intonation.
