About the Music

In 1986, the International Whaling Commission issued a moratorium on commercial whaling, but several countries continue to hunt whales, including endangered species. These countries circumvent the law by stating that whales are caught for research, but most scientists agree that killing the whales is unnecessary for research and that it is quite possible to learn more from living whales. In addition, whale meat from these campaigns is packaged and sold in stores and restaurants.

With no clear method of stopping these whalers (who hunt in whale sanctuaries as well), Captain Paul Watson and his organization, the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, have endeavored to stop the whaling fleets on their own. Their tactics include throwing stink bombs on whaling ships to make the crew sick, using prop foulers to jam engines, and even ramming ships. He has rammed and sunk several whaling ships, and has saved hundreds if not thousands of whales, seals, and other animals. Captain Watson and his crew regularly risk their lives.

This work paints a picture of life aboard this modern-day pirate ship. After describing the quiet morning at port, the music becomes more rhythmically intense as it portrays the Farley Mowat, Watson's ship. Painted entirely black with a pirate flag hoisted up, it is an intimidating ship that includes a giant spear on its side. Called the can opener, this weapon is used to pierce the hull of whaling ships.

Soon, the ship leaves port in pursuit of whaling fleets. The music becomes more adventurous and intense as they eventually encounter a fleet and attempt to stop it from catching more whales. During the campaign, the crew discovers the body of a dead whale floating in the water. This section, labeled The Harpoon, describes the crew's aversion to seeing the harpooned whale. The music then takes on a very solemn character, in remembrance of the fallen creature. The final section begins to build and take on the character of the beginning. With this increasing intensity comes a new resiliency and hope that Watson and his crew can once again make a difference, both now and in the future.

Whale Warriors was commissioned by the Reeths-Puffer Middle School Symphonic Band in Muskegon, Michigan; Richard Erne, Director.
