Program Notes

"The mail must go through." This simple four-word creed was the unswerving mission statement of one of America's most legendary (though short-lived) institutions; the Pony Express! Spurred by the ever-looming threat of Civil War, the Pony Express was born from the need for faster communication with the West. The service began in April 1860 when riders left simultaneously from St. Joseph, MO and Sacramento, CA. Consisting of horse riders carrying saddlebags of mail across a 2000-mile trail, any given trip averaged ten days and covered approximately 250 miles in a 24-hour period. In time, the service would eventually grow to over 100 stations, 90 riders, and roughly 500 horses. The Express rider's journey was fraught with hazards and danger, as job advertisements would read: "WANTED: Young, skinny, wiry fellows not over eighteen. Must be expert riders, willing to risk death daily. Orphans preferred..." The service proved itself astonishingly efficient during its time, losing only one delivery. With the advent of the Pacific Telegraph in October 1862, the tenacious Pony Express would be rendered obsolete after a glorious 19-month run.

This intrepid work revolves around a quickly recognizable rhythmic motif, depicting the wild and harrowing ride of the brash and daring young rider. From the beginning, strong brass statements and vibrant woodwind runs are heard throughout as the music drives with unbridled vigor. The mood soon settles into a melodious waltz section, illustrating the tranquility of night. While the music has calmed, the brisk tempo endures as the ride MUST continue! After a soft melodic flute motif, the initial boisterous theme is once again at the forefront as the intensity of the ride careens to a brilliant finish; MISSION ACCOMPLISHED!

Rehearsal Suggestions

Please be encouraged to play toward the high end of the suggested metronome marking to truly capture the rugged, carefree character of the music. While the mood of the waltz section is gentle in comparison to the opening statements, the tempo must remain consistent and the music must have a light, nimble quality. While the percussion section is a key factor in maintaining the drive, care must be taken to not overshadow.
