PROGRAM NOTE

Dragonrider takes the listener on a twisting, soaring journey astride a powerful fire-breathing dragon as it flies over mountaintop castles and the roaring sea. Composer Steve Parsons writes, “Inspired by the imagery of popular fantasy works such as those by J.R.R. Tolkien, George R.R. Martin and J.K. Rowling, I wanted to create a musical picture of these fantastic worlds and their majestic creatures through strong fanfare-like statements in the brass section connecting with colorful woodwind flourishes and Celtic style percussion.”

NOTES TO CONDUCTOR

In a highly programmatic piece such as this, it's easy to let the effects overwhelm the other material. At all times, let the melodic line shine through as it's handed off from section to section.

In measures 1-8, be sure the trumpets eighth note triplet fanfare interlocks with the imitative lines in the trombone and horn. It is important these three sections be part of the same statement. It's also critical the dovetailed low woodwind triplets seamlessly feel like one rolling line of perpetual motion underneath the brass and percussion textures.

The horn melody at measure 11 should always maintain a full, film score-like sonority with aggressive accents. Careful attention to the articulations will also help ensure a unified ensemble sound.

The high woodwinds at measure 65 help to maintain tempo and forward momentum. It is critical they do not rush through this section. Similarly, the xylophone at measure 81 will need to “drive the bus” by carefully watching the conductor.

The triplet pyramid figures at measures 95-100 should be balanced so they build dynamically, with each entrance clearly audible.

Finally, the ending coda section at measure 189 needs to be bold and aggressive. Please be sure the exchange of the fanfare from section to section is balanced throughout.

I hope that you and your band find Dragonrider to be a thrilling and rewarding ride through fantastic worlds of adventure!
