About the Music

This work draws on mankind's fascination with flying and our conquest of the skies. The fanfare-style themes combine with the energetic rhythms of the piano to depict musically the thrill of takeoff and flight.

While not required, piano contributes a great deal to the composition. The triplet pulse makes the work sound much more difficult, yet all strings have only quarter notes for their smallest value, done intentionally to help students avoid having to feel a pulse of two eighth notes against three. The piece also provides an excellent opportunity for reinforcing dynamics and balance, as all sections contribute melodic material (though not in a contrived setting).

Best wishes to you and your students!
