About the Music

This musical fantasy paints a vivid picture of ghosts patrolling the dark waters in the middle of a vast sea. It opens with a dissonant shriek before giving way to an eerie calm. As the melody develops, the harmonies become increasingly more unsettled, and a second shriek startles the listener once again. Finally, the music resolves and moves into a fast paced depiction of battle and life on the high seas. After a series of tonal shifts, the opening theme is juxtaposed with the rhythmic intensity of the second section. Eventually, the opening theme again takes command as a third and final shriek brings the music to a grinding halt, signaling the return of despair and solitude. Ms. 78, labeled grave, marks the very point where the phantom pirates accept their fate and embrace it solemnly. Once they are able to do that, they can then embark on their never ending journeys to the ends of the earth and back, terrorizing everyone who comes across their path. The ending of the piece marks this acceptance, and the phantom pirates embark on their eternal trip.

The three "shrieks" (beginning with ms. 1) should be very heavy and accented. They should not sound pretty - be sure students use plenty of weight to get as much sound out as possible. Students will tend to be late coming off eighth rests in the second section. Encourage them to play lightly and anticipate all entrances. At ms. 61, 2nd violins need to play strong as they are carrying the rhythmic pulse that appears throughout this section. In addition, violin 1 should use full bows and play sustained, alternating on long notes as needed.
