About the Music

Two different meanings of the term "afterburn" provided the inspiration for this adrenaline-packed work. The first is an intense and exhausting sensation that follows vigorous exercise (primarily caused by the need to take in more oxygen to help the body recover). The second refers to the use of afterburners in jet engines (typically used in military supersonic aircraft), which provides an incredible boost in thrust compared to a typical jet engine. In both cases, the core element involves the use of tremendous energy in an effort to become stronger and faster.

I am a big proponent of exercise and visit the gym often; thus, I feel the exercise induced "afterburn" often. Ironically, while the body becomes physically exhausted, the mind can become incredibly clear. I find that I do some of my best work after the gym - I am alert, energized, and ready to take on the world. It is in this spirit that I composed Afterburn, the musical equivalent of a quick, intense workout that leaves both players and the audience with renewed energy and awareness.

Afterburn also provides the opportunity to explore easy meter changes and some aggressive bowing techniques to create momentum and power. Have students follow bowings carefully as they will help create the musical energy needed to perform the piece. In essence, the orchestra should feel its own afterburn after rehearsing and performing the piece. The ultimate measure of a successful performance will be the tremendous adrenaline rush that follows.
